THE STORY OF 'THE TEMPEST'

ON a certain Island, far out at sea beyond the nearest European coast, lived a grave elderly man, Prospero, and a beautiful maiden, Miranda, his only child. Their home was a cave having several chambers, and Miranda could remember no other, nor how she and her father had come there. She kept no memory of her mother, and indeed had grown up without sight of a single human being save her father-not counting a strange brutish monster whom Prospero had found on the Island, taught to speak, and compelled to hew wood and draw water, with other hard employments; for this Caliban, as they called him, was less a man than a monster. Of her father she stood in no little awe, for he had many books in his cave and had learned from them to practise magic. His spells gave him command over numerous spirits which-sometimes visible, sometimes not-haunted the place: and of these his pet servant was a delicate sprite he called Ariel. Nor in gratitude, although by nature rebellious against human service, could Ariel refuse to obey a master who had released him from dreadful torments. Years before Prospero's coming, the Island had belonged to a foul witch, Sycorax, whose history was this.-The people of Algiers, where she formerly lived, having found her guilty of unspeakable crimes and sorceries, yet remembered that she had once done the state a service, and were unwilling to put her to death : so they banished her instead, put her on board a ship, and carried her to this spot, where the sailors left her. Here she gave birth to Caliban. Here, too, she made the spirits serve her; and enraged at finding the gentle Ariel mutinous against her wicked commands, imprisoned him in a cleft pinetree; in which anguish he lingered for twelve years, and but for the coming of Prospero, who released him, might have lingered for ever; for in the meantime the hag had died.

A stern but not unkindly father, then, and the man-beast Caliban, had been Miranda's only acquaintance until a day when accident and a furious tempest brought a shipload of human beings to the Island. In the height of the gale Prospero showed her a tall vessel desperately tacking and shifting canvas to fight a way out to sea-room—but in vain, for she had run down too close upon the Island, and the thrust of the waves heaved her steadily shoreward. By and by she struck, and a terrible cry went up from her decks. Though Miranda knew nothing of men and their calamities, the cry (as she told her father) 'knocked against her very heart.' She had suffered with those she saw suffer. She believed—for the ship was no longer visible—that all on board had perished. Something told her that her father had, by his arts, raised this fury of the wind and waters; and now, though it was too late, she besought him to allay it.

He bade her be comforted, and told her that no harm was done. 'No harm,' he repeated while she still wrung her hands; and, laying by his robe of magic, he assured her that, albeit the vessel had gone down under her eyes, not a soul on board had perished or suffered so much as the loss of a hair. 'But,' said he, 'there is more to tell, and it must be told now. Can you remember, child, a time before we came to this cell of ours? I doubt it, for at the time you were scarcely three years old.' 'Certainly, sir, I can,' Miranda answered; 'although it seems less like a real memory than a dream. But had I not once four or five women that waited on me?' 'Yes, and more,' her father replied; but, although he questioned her, Miranda could not recall their first coming to the Island, how it happened or when, or indeed anything about it. So Prospero told her. Twelve years ago he had been the reigning Duke of Milan, though a neglectful one-for his books and studies absorbed the time he should have given to state affairs; but this seemed a small matter, since he could safely trust the government, as he believed, to his younger brother Antonio. This Antonio, however, proved a traitor, and seeing his elder neglectful of worldly ends, laid a plot to seize the dukedom for himself-his scheme being to offer the hitherto free Duchy of Milan in fealty to the King of Naples, to pay tribute and homage, on condition that Naples helped him to dispossess Prospero and rule in his stead. Naples consented greedily; and, the plot being ripe, one night Antonio and his confederates opened the gates of Milan to the Neapolitan troops. A little later, still in the darkness and by the same gates, the rightful Duke and his small daughter-his only heiress, a crying babe-were hurried out into exile. 'Alack'! broke in Miranda, at this point in the tale-'I cannot remember how I wept: and since I cannot, see! I weep for it over again. But why did they not then and there destroy us?' 'That is well asked,' said her father. 'Their reason was, dear, that they dared not; my people Instead, then, of killing us, our enemies loved me too well. hurried us on board ship, sailed us some leagues out to sea, and there cast us adrift in a rotten boat without tackle, sail or mast.' 'Ah, what a trouble must I have been to you then !' sighed Miranda. 'You were a cherub, rather, bestowed by Heaven to save me; nay, indeed, while I wept and groaned, it was as if your infant smile had a fortitude direct from heaven. The business of casting us adrift had been committed to one Gonzalo, a noble Neapolitan. His heart smote him; and at the last he stored our boat with food and fresh water, clothes, and other necessaries; to which, knowing how I loved them, he added some books from my library, by me prized above my Dukedom. So Providence brought us ashore here, to this island, where I have been your father and schoolmaster too.' 'Heaven thank you for it !' said Miranda gratefully : 'but would I might see that man, to thank him !'

Prospero had resumed his mantle, and now explained why he had raised the late storm. Fortune (he said) had turned to be his dear lady, and had brought his late enemies to this very island to wreck them in the ship Miranda had seen founder. Saying this, and while she wondered, Prospero charmed her to slumber with a wave of his wand, and with another summoned his attendant Ariel to give news of the wreck.

On the instant Ariel came tripping to report how well he had done his work. The ship indeed had been carrying the King of Naples, with Ferdinand his son and heir, his brother Sebastian, Antonio the false Duke of Milan, and other courtiers-including the same good Gonzalo who had befriended Prospero; all on their way home from Africa, whither his Majesty had voyaged to betroth his daughter, Claribel, Ferdinand's sister, to the King of Tunis. Ariel narrated how, in the height of the storm, he had boarded the vessel and danced like a flame over every part of her-topmast, yards, bowsprit, the deck, the waist, and into each separate cabin -blazing between the claps of thunder and everywhere carrying confusion; how, in a panic frenzy, with the ship in flames behind them, the passengers had leapt overboard ; and how by magic all had come safe to land and were wandering the Island in separate parties, each supposing the other drowned. By the same magic their very clothes had suffered no damage from the brine; and as for the ship, she had floated quietly into a creek, where she lay with her crew all charmed asleep after their labour and peril. As for Ferdinand, the King's son, he had been the first to leap; 'but' (said Ariel) 'though he seemed to be swallowed by the waves under his father's eyes, he also came ashore, but alone and in a corner of the isle, where I have left him seated with folded arms and lamenting his father's loss.' 'My brave Ariel!' said Prospero. 'Thou hast performed it all exactly. In two days now thou shalt have thy freedom: but meanwhile I have further tasks for thee. Go, and fetch this Prince hither.'

Off flew Ariel to the spot where he had left Ferdinand sitting, and so began to flit around him invisible, touching his harp and chanting a song that pierced the youth's ear and awakened him from his moody lethargy.

What and where should this music be?' cried Ferdinand, starting to his feet. Ariel sang—

> Full fathom five thy father lies; Of his bones are coral made; Those are pearls that were his eyes: Nothing of him that doth fade
> But doth suffer a sea-change
> Into something rich and strange.
> Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell: Ding-dong !
> Hark ! now I hear them,—Ding-dong, bell !'

Amazed, the Prince followed the music, till it led him to the entrance of the cave where sat Prospero with Miranda, now waked out of sleep. So the young man looked upon the maid, and the maid upon the young man; both wondering, but Miranda wondering most, for she had never seen a young man before, and supposed that he must be a spirit. Ferdinand, for his part, deemed that she must be the goddess of the Island.

She, when he made bold to hail her as such, answered that she was no goddess, but a simple maid only. Still her eyes dwelt upon the youth, while she told herself that a being so handsome must assuredly be something more than human. Prospero, noting how their eyes met, was secretly pleased; but to make trial of Ferdinand he put on a stern face and addressed him, saying, 'You are a spy, sir, come to this Island to steal it from me, who am lord of it.' Ferdinand protested that he was no spy, and Miranda tried to check her father's strange wrath: but Prospero continued, 'Follow me, sir! And do you, daughter, keep silence; he is a traitor. Come, sir, I say! I will put thee in chains for this; thy drink shall be sea-water and thy meat mussels and the husks of acorns.' He stamped his foot in command. Ferdinand, incensed, would have drawn his sword: but Prospero's magic held him helpless. Still Miranda held to her father's robe, supplicating him. 'What!' he exclaimed, 'an advocate for an impostor! Come, sir!' The poor Prince found he had no choice but to obey. 'My spirits,' he said, 'are all tied up, as though in a dream. I have lost my father, I am weak, without friends, forced to submit; but all this were nothing, and prison nothing, if once a day from my imprisonment I could have sight of this maiden.' And Miranda, following, could only protest that her father was of better nature than he showed himself.

The punishment to which Ferdinand found himself condemned was that of collecting and piling together some thousands of the logs which Caliban had chopped for firewood : and, being a prince, delicately nurtured, he found the task heavy enough; yet being a prince and of good blood he endured it bravely for Miranda's sake; while she watched him, her heart aching, and her father watched them both from a distance, waiting for the event. 'Alas!' said Miranda, able to bear the sight no longer, 'I pray you set that log down and let me carry for you. My father has gone to his studies, and is safe for these three hours.' But Ferdinand would by no means have this. He protested that he was not weary; that she being by turned night into morning; that at home in his father's Court he had known and liked many a lady, but never had he met perfect woman until now. 'Tell me your name, I beseech you, that I may set it in my prayers.' She told him, and as she spoke the word, cried out that she had broken her father's behest. (But Prospero smiled as he heard, for all was going as he wished.) 'Miranda!' exclaimed Ferdinand, 'ay, and of all women worthiest to be admired!'

Poor Miranda told him that she for her part could remember no woman's face, save her own in her glass; 'nor any man except thee, good friend, and my dear father. Yet I would not wish to have any other companion in the world than you, nor can my imagination form any other shape but yours, that I could like. But I am prattling too wildly and forgetting my father's comxiv ACT I. Scene II. MIRANDA. O, the cry did knock Against my very heart (page 10).

mands.' 'Miranda!' cried the young man, 'I am by rank a prince; to-day, I fear me, a king; and my pride could not endure this slavery, but—hear my soul speak!—the instant I saw you my heart flew out to serve you; it keeps in your service, and for your sake I am the patient log-man you see me.' 'Does this,' asked Miranda, 'mean that you love me?' Ferdinand swore by heaven and earth that he loved, prized, honoured her above all the world. She wondered at the tears that sprang in her eyes. 'I am a fool to weep at what I am glad of.' 'Then why weep?' 'I weep at my unworthiness—no, let me put aside cunning and speak to you in plain and holy innocence. I am your wife, if you will have me: if not I will die your maid, and meanwhile live your servant.' 'My mistress, rather,' said Ferdinand, kneeling; 'my mistress, dearest; and I ever, as now, humble before you!'

Now was Prospero's time to reveal himself. 'Sir,' said he, addressing Ferdinand, 'if I have punished you too austerely, I make you rich amends. The vexations I put upon you were but my way of making trial of your love. You have stood that trial, and therefore—see now—I give you my daughter, that dear part of myself. Sit and talk with her while I devise how to make preparation for your wedding.'

Meanwhile in other parts of the Island the rest of the shipwrecked passengers were faring less happily. The King of Naples and his courtiers had reached an open glade and there seated themselves to rest; the King silent and mirthless, brooding over the loss of his son, while the others talked and tried in their various ways to console or divert his grief. Honest Gonzalo reminded him that they had all cause to thank Heaven for their own escape. They noted the delicate air of the place, the lush green of the grass, and—with wonder—that their garments had no sea-stains, but seemed as fresh as when first donned for the ceremonies at Tunis. This led to talk of the wedding, when King Alonso broke in bitterly that he had left a daughter there and had now lost a son. One, who had seen Ferdinand in the waves and with what a lusty stroke he had swum, made no doubt that he had come safe to land. 'No, no; he is gone'-the King would hear of no comfort. His brother Sebastian, who owed him no good will, took occasion of his woe to remind him that it came of his own obstinacy. 'We all supplicated you against this marriage, and now it has made widows enough in Venice and Milan.' The King begged peace from these reproaches; if the fault were his so also was the worst loss of all: and Gonzalo, to divert them, fell a-talking of what he would do, if he were King of the Island, to build up a perfect commonwealth. Whether through fatigue, or because the air of the Island made them drowsy, or because Ariel sat watching them in the tree-tops and playing them with his harp to slumber, heaviness came upon them, and by and by they dropped asleep one by one-even Alonso, in spite of his misery-all but the King's brother Sebastian and Antonio, the false Duke of Milan. And while these two sat talking together it entered their wicked minds that by murdering the King here they could both advance their ambitions. By hints at first, then openly, the plot was soon hatched, and the pair were gripping their swords when Ariel swooped down, invisible, to Gonzalo's ear and sang to him 'Awake! Awake!' Gonzalo leapt up with a cry, and all the others started from slumber-to see the conspirators standing with naked swords. They explained that, hearing a terrible noise, they had drawn to defend the King : and this satisfied the others for the time. But, the spot being dangerous, Alonso ordered all to set forward again and take up the search for his son. They wandered on, therefore, until Gonzalo declared he could go no further, his old bones ached so. The King, too, was weary, and had lost all hope. Hunger had begun to attack them when-to their amazement-strange shapes appeared bearing a table with a banquet and inviting them, in dumbshow, to eat. Breaking through their fears the famished courtiers would have fallen to, when again Ariel (who had brought Prospero, in his cloak of invisibility, to watch) swooped down in the form of a Harpy, and at a clap of his wings the banquet vanished. 'You are men of sin,' said the apparition sternly, addressing Alonso, Sebastian and Antonio; 'and this madness has deservedly come upon you. Nay, put up your swords! They are idle, even if you could lift them. Hear me remind you three how wickedly years ago, you drove the good Prospero out of Milan and exposed him to the sea. The powers of the winds and the waves have now become his avengers. They have snatched thy son from thee, Alonso, and now nothing but a lingering perdition awaits thee unless thou repent and lead henceforth a clear life.' So saying, Ariel vanished in thunder. 'Yes!' cried the distraught Alonso, 'my crime pursues me. The seas, the winds, sang the name of Prospero, and now this thunder repeats it like a deep and dreadful organ-pipe. For my guilt my son lies deep in the ooze, and there will I lie beside him!' He ran seaward, demented, some courtiers following, as best they could, to hinder his intention; while others pursued Sebastian and Antonio, who, equally demented, had plunged into the wood, hacking with their swords at imaginary fiends.

xvi

In yet another corner of the Island Ariel had been busy. There Caliban, the man-monster, had been cutting and binding faggots, and cursing over his task. He had dragged his load into an open space, when he saw an apparition approaching and fell flat, supposing that it was one of his master's spirits sent to torment him for his laziness. His mistake and his fear had much excuse, for the apparition wore a fool's cap and a suit of motley. It was, in fact, one Trinculo, King Alonso's jester, who had reached shore as safely as his betters. An afterblow of the storm coming on just then, he was caught without bush or shelter just at the moment when he stumbled over Caliban. 'What in the world have we here?' he wondered as he stooped over the monster (who still shammed dead); 'a man, or a fish? Dead, or C alive? It smells like a fish—but 'tis legged like a man! and his fins like arms! Warm, o' my troth! This is no fish, but an islander, that hath lately suffered by a thunderbolt.' The gale at this moment broke out with renewed fury. 'Alas! it is come again! My best way is to creep under his gaberdine; there is no other shelter hereabouts. Misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows. I will harbour here till the dregs of the storm be blown over.'

Trinculo had scarcely taken shelter under Caliban's cloak before yet another strange figure came driving across the open before the squall. This was Stephano, a drunken butler, who had floated ashore on a cask of wine heaved overboard to lighten the ship; and he still clutched a bottle as he staggered along singing and brought up against Caliban with a kick. 'Do not torment me: O!' whined Caliban. Stephano, who did not want for courage, stood still and tried to pull his wits together at sight of four legs sticking from under one cloak. 'What's here? Devils? Ha! I have not escaped drowning to be afraid now of four legs. . . . This is some four-legged monster of the Island, who hath got, as I take it, the ague.' Here Caliban stood up, shaking and whimpering to be spared. 'He would bring his wood home faster, he promised.' With him, at least as much frightened, rose up Trinculo. 'I should know that voice!' gasped Trinculo. 'Four legs and two voices!' hiccupped Stephano, now utterly taken aback. 'Stephano! I am Trinculo-thy good friend Trinculo!' Stephano reached for his good friend's legs and dragged him forth. 'Trinculo, indeed! How camest thou here, Trinculo?' 'And thou, Stephano-art thou living? What, two Neapolitans escaped!' 'Prithee,' begged Stephano, 'do not pull me about so: my stomach is not constant. I came ashore in a cask. And thou?' 'I swam ashore like a duck.' 'Here, kiss the book upon that'-Stephano tendered him the bottle. 'O Stephano! hast thou any more of this excellent wine?' 'The whole butt, man; my cellar is in a rock by the seashore.' The pair turned their attention upon Caliban, fawning before them. He supposed them dropped from heaven, out of the moon: his young mistress Miranda had told him all about the Man in the Moon. 'Come, swear to that; kiss the book!' said Stephano, presenting the bottle again. Caliban drank. 'I pray thee,' said he, 'be my god! I'll show thee every fertile inch of the Island, the best springs of water. I'll pluck thee berries, fish for thee and get wood, bring thee where the young crab-apples grow, dig thee pignuts with my long nails, teach thee where the jay nests and how to snare the marmosets, point thee out where the filberts cluster, and fetch thee young scamels from the rock.' 'Lead the way,' commanded Stephano: 'the King and all our company being drowned, we are lords here. Here, carry my bottle.' Caliban led them off, carrying the bottle and singing—

xviii

> ''Ban, 'Ban, Cacaliban Has a new master : get a new man !'

By and by, as they went and the monster refreshed himself with many pulls at the bottle, it came into his head to tell how, beside themselves, there were but two living souls on the Island. He described Prospero and Miranda; the hard mastery of the one, the fresh young beauty of the other. Until Prospero were overthrown they could never (he promised) be kings of this delectable spot. Stephano and Trinculo listened eagerly-and so did the faithful Ariel, by this time perched above them in the air and still invisible. Presently they began to hatch a plot; and although Ariel, mimicking Trinculo's voice, threw them from time to time into drunken confusion and brought them to blows, by degrees the plot took shape. They were to creep to Prospero's cave, seize his books (for fear of magic) and brain him while he slept, as his custom was of an afternoon. They shook hands on their resolve, and Ariel with a twang of his harp flew off to warn his master. The tune falling out of the sky, by this time blue and clear of its late storm, for a moment confounded the conspirators. But Caliban bade them take heart: the Island (said he) was full of xix noises, of sounds and sweet airs which only delighted and hurt nobody. And this assurance made them the more determined to destroy Prospero and possess so fair a kingdom.

Prospero himself, cloaked and with his wizard's staff in hand, was conjuring up a masque or phantasy—in which goddesses appeared from the clouds and spoke, and nymphs and reapers danced for the delight of the two young lovers seated at the cave's mouth—when with a start he remembered Ariel's warning of this conspiracy. With a sharp wave of his wand, and much to Miranda's and Ferdinand's surprise, he broke off the sport and dismissed the apparitions. A moment later, conscious of the alteration in his looks, he begged Ferdinand's pardon. 'Be not dismayed. These our actors were but spirits and have melted into air. They have faded, even as the pageant of this great globe shall, one day, melt and dissolve. We, too, are of the same stuff as dreams, and a sleep rounds our little life. For me, I am vexed just now; my old brain is troubled. Sir, bear with my weakness!'

He dismissed them and summoned Ariel. But Ariel, it appeared, had been more watchful than his master. With his music he had led the drunken trio astray through gorse-brakes, briar and thorn patches, undergrowth of all kinds, up and down, hither and thither, all in a maze, and had lured them finally up to their chins into a stinking stagnant pond. Thence now, by Prospero's orders he enticed them, skipping before them with a heap of glittering apparel which he hung on a line to entice these would-be kings. They were creeping to the cave, when their eyes fell on the finery, and at once they broke off to snatch it and array themselves. But in the midst of their employment, and while their limbs were tangled in the clothes, Ariel raised a loud baying, and in rushed his attendant spirits in the shape of a pack of hounds. 'Hey, Mountain! There it goes, Silver! Fury! Tyrant! there, there !' halloed Ariel, setting them on ; and the wretched drunkards dropped their spoil to flee this way and that, screaming, plunging further and further into the forest.

'And now,' said Prospero, 'my dainty Ariel, you shall soon have your freedom. But while my charms crack not and my power is yet strong in me, there is a short task more. Fetch me the King of Naples and his companions; and afterwards go to the ship, where the mariners lie all in a charmed sleep, under hatches. Wake and bring me the master and the boatswain. These things done, in a little while I may break my magic staff and drown my book.'

Ariel flew off and anon was back again, bringing King Alonso and all the courtiers whom he had left spellbound in a grove of limes. He led them within a circle which Prospero had traced on the ground, and there they stood spellbound again, looking about them with wild eyes. Prospero stepped forward. He addressed himself first to Gonzalo, using the kindest words, and at the sound of his voice the general stupefaction seemed to dissolve and reason to creep back into the disordered brains of his audience, clearing their senses. But while they, who had wronged him and thought him dead, still doubted that here was Prospero in flesh and blood, he sent Ariel to fetch him the clothes he had worn aforetime as Duke of Milan and Ariel, habiting him, sang in anticipation of sweet liberty—

'Where the bee sucks, there suck I:
In a cowslip's bell I lie;
There I couch when owls do cry.
On the bat's back I do fly
After summer merrily.
Merrily, merrily, shall I live now
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.'

Then, no longer able to doubt that verily this was Prospero standing before them, the King of Naples confessed the common wrong they had done him, and promised to reinstate him in his dukedom. 'Sir,' answered Prospero, 'this cell is my only court here; here I have few attendants and no subjects. Yet I may make shift to requite you.' And at a wave of his wand the door of the cave opened and revealed the King's son, Ferdinand, seated quietly with Miranda and playing at chess.

THE TEMPEST

In the amazement of this meeting all were reconciled. Ferdinand ran and knelt to his father, while Miranda, looking around on these many strange faces, could only cry out, 'What goodly creatures! How beautiful is mankind, and what a strange new world that holds such people !' Nothing remained-King Alonso having heartily approved his son's choice of a wife-but for Ariel to bring up the master and boatswain of the ship, and on their heels to drive in Caliban, Stephano and Trinculo from the woods with their stolen apparel. Caliban cringed before Prospero. 'What a thrice-double ass have I been,' said he, 'to mistake this drunkard for a god and worship this dull fool!' The Boatswain having reported that all the ship's tackle was sound, and she ready for sailing to-morrow, Prospero invited his guests to sup and sleep with him that one night before all sailed together for home, there to celebrate the nuptials of Ferdinand and Miranda. So, on the morrow, all hoisted sail and left the Island to Caliban; and Ariel received his liberty, to follow the ship so far as he listed, breathing a gentle home-wind to waft her.

Most of us who can remember the day—it may be, the very hour—when as children we first dipped into the pages of Shakespeare, will allow it to be, if an accident, a most fortunate one that chose The Tempest in defiance of chronological order and gave it first place in the Folio of 1623. Actually it was almost the last play, if not quite the last, written by Shakespeare. But may the authority of the First Folio long continue to misplace it and keep it the first to open our children's eyes and catch their fluttering imaginations! For no other exerts the same instant spell upon a child or unlocks such a doorway into marvels. Old men read and rejoice in its philosophy, its dignity, its charitable calm of mind, its noble conclusion of the whole matter: but the child heeds none of these. The magic Island attracts him with its reefs and rainbow surges; within the ring of them it enchants him to shore, to track the feet of elves along the yellow sands, to explore the woods, to pant after Ariel's harp, to peer with delicate terror into Caliban's cave. For the child, Shakespeare in this his closing work becomes a child again. Never, surely, was such a combination of aged, almost weary, wisdom with young-eyed romance. But of course John Hemminge and Henry Condell, the editors of the First Folio, did not print The Tempest first by any accident. They had been friends of Shakespeare and his fellow-actors, and knew for certain when and upon what occasion he wrote it. Now the date of the play has been much disputed; but it was indisputably acted at Court in the beginning of the year 1613, before Prince Charles (afterwards King Charles I.), the Lady Elizabeth his sister, and the Prince Palatine Elector who had come over to England to marry her; and the evidence points to its having been composed expressly for the bridal entertainment.¹ If this be so, some of us must feel that even such a masterpiece as The Tempest gains in lustre by association with the Princess Elizabeth, 'th' eclipse and glory of her kind,' whose history was sorrowful indeed, yet whose effluence such that no true man came within its area but (as the memoirs of those times wonderfully attest) his face was transfigured, his soul lifted and set above base ambitions; to serve whom was to earn suffering but to win and wear the ineffaceable seal of the true knight.

If, then, John Hemminge and (possibly also) Henry Condell presented The Tempest before royalty in 1613 and earned the royal approval, we can easily understand why they gave it the first place in their collected edition of the plays. The royal favour may have started its popularity. We have overwhelming evidence, at any rate, that popular—very greatly popular—it was.

It has been suggested—and, I believe, with truth—that in the person of Prospero Shakespeare was glancing half-ironically at himself. Irony, wise and resigned, underlies all the romance of the story. The Island is, after all, not Prospero's. It belongs by inheritance to the man-monster who enters cringing, yet with a curse—

'I must eat my dinner.

This island 's mine.'

Prospero may weave spells over it, Ariel music; but when the one has laid by his mantle, the other resumed his liberty, the Island will revert to Caliban; and not by inheritance only, but by right. It is Caliban who knows the best springs, where the crabs grow, where to dig for pig-nuts, where to find the young scamels on the rocks. This bookworm Prospero is a hard master, reaping where he has not sown and gathering where he has not strawed; abominably potent, to be kneeled to because he can afflict Caliban's bed with hedgehogs; and Ariel has been enlarged for a season to play his tricks. But by and by Ariel will fly away after summer, and Prospero take ship, and his enchantments—

> 'Like this insubstantial pageant faded, Leave not a rack behind.'

As for Ferdinand and Miranda, they are fairy prince and princess, encircled for a moment by rainbows of island surf. It is all sleep, concludes this wise man—all this clinging of love and conspiring of ambition—

> 'We are such stuff As dreams are made on, and our little life Is rounded with a sleep.'

So concludes Prospero, whose own preoccupation with books had been a sleep within a sleep; and so, breaking his wand, concludes our Shakespeare, who in younger days had sung to us 'how that life was but a flower—

> And therefore take the present time With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino !'

GON. Good, yet remember whom thou hast aboard. BOATS. None that I more love than myself. You are a counsellor; if you can command these elements to silence, and work the peace of the present, we will not hand a rope more; use your authority: if you cannot, give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready in your cabin for the mischance of the hour, if it so hap. TRIN. Excellent.

STEPH. Give me thy hand: I am sorry I beat thee; but, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head.

CAL. Within this half hour will he be asleep:

Wilt thou destroy him then?

STEPH.

ARI. This will I tell my master.

CAL. Thou makest me merry; I am full of pleasure:

Ay, on mine honour.

Let us be jocund : will you troll the catch You taught me but while-ere?

STEPH. At thy request, monster, I will do reason, any reason. Come on, Trinculo, let us sing.

[Sings] Flout 'em and scout 'em And scout 'em and flout 'em; Thought is free.

CAL. That's not the tune.

[ARIEL plays the tune on a tabor and pipe. STEPH. What is this same?

TRIN. This is the tune of our catch, played by the picture of Nobody.

STEPH. If thou beest a man, show thyself in thy likeness: if thou beest a devil, take 't as thou list.

TRIN. O, forgive me my sins!

STEPH. He that dies pays all debts: I defy thee. Mercy upon us!

CAL. Art thou afeard?

STEPH. No, monster, not I.

CAL. Be not afeard; the isle is full of noises, Sounds and sweet airs, that give delight and hurt not.

Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments Will hum about mine ears; and sometime voices, That, if I then had waked after long sleep, Will make me sleep again: and then, in dreaming, The clouds methought would open and show riches

Ready to drop upon me, that, when I waked, I cried to dream again.

STEPH. This will prove a brave kingdom to me, where I shall have my music for nothing.

CAL. When Prospero is destroyed.

STEPH. That shall be by and by: I remember the story.

TRIN. The sound is going away; let's follow it, and after do our work.

STEPH. Lead, monster; we'll follow. I would I could see this taborer; he lays it on.

SCENE III

Another part of the island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and others.

Gon. By'r lakin, I can go no further, sir; My old bones ache : here's a maze trod indeed Through forth-rights and meanders! By your patience,

I needs must rest me.

ALON. Old lord, I cannot blame thee,
Who am myself attach'd with weariness,
To the dulling of my spirits: sit down, and rest.
Even here I will put off my hope and keep it
No longer for my flatterer: he is drown'd
Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land. Well, let him go.
ANT. [aside to SEB.] I am right glad that he's so out of hope.

Do not, for one repulse, forego the purpose That you resolved to effect.

SEB. [aside to ANT.]The next advantageWill we take throughly.

ANT. [aside to SEB.] Let it be to-night:For, now they are oppress'd with travel, theyWill not, nor cannot, use such vigilanceAs when they are fresh.

SEB. [aside to ANT.] I say, to-night: no more. [Solemn and strange music.

ALON. What harmony is this? My good friends, hark!

GON. Marvellous sweet music!

Enter PROSPERO above, invisible. Enter several strange Shapes, bringing in a banquet; they dance about it with gentle actions of salutation; and, inviting the King, etc. to eat, they depart.

ALON. Give us kind keepers, heavens! What were these!

SEB. A living drollery. Now I will believe 96

That there are unicorns, that in Arabia

There is one tree, the phœnix' throne, one phœnix

ANT. I'll believe both;
And what does else want credit, come to me,
And I'll be sworn 'tis true : travellers ne'er did lie,
Though fools at home condemn 'em.
GON. If in Naples
I should report this now, would they believe me?
If I should say, I saw such islanders—
For, certes, these are people of the island—
Who, though they are of monstrous shape, yet,

note,

ALON.

Their manners are more gentle-kind than of Our human generation you shall find

Many, nay, almost any.

Thou hast said well; for some of you there present Are worse than devils.

I cannot too much muse

Such shapes, such gesture and such sound, expressing,

Although they want the use of tongue, a kind Of excellent dumb discourse.

SEB. No matter, since They have left their viands behind; for we have stomachs.

Will't please you taste of what is here? ALON. Not I.

GON. Faith, sir, you need not fear. When we were boys,

Who would believe that there were mountaineers Dew-lapp'd like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em

Wallets of flesh? or that there were such men Whose heads stood in their breasts? which now we find

Thunder and lightning. Enter ARIEL, like a harpy; claps his wings upon the table; and, with a quaint device, the banquet vanishes.

ARI. You are three men of sin, whom Destiny, That hath to instrument this lower world And what is in 't, the never-surfeited sea Hath caused to belch up you; and on this island Where man doth not inhabit; you 'mongst men Being most unfit to live. The powers, delaying, not forgetting, have Incensed the seas and shores, yea, all the creatures,

Perform'd, my Ariel; a grace it had, devouring:
Of my instruction hast thou nothing bated
In what thou hadst to say: so, with good life
And observation strange, my meaner ministers
Their several kinds have done. My high charms work

And these mine enemies are all knit up
In their distractions ; they now are in my power ;
And in these fits I leave them, while I visit
Young Ferdinand, whom they suppose is drown'd,

Enter IRIS.

IRIS. Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas Of wheat, rye, barley, vetches, oats and pease; Thy turfy mountains, where live nibbling sheep, And flat meads thatch'd with stover, them to keep; 108

PROS. Say again, where didst thou leave these varlets?
ARI. I told you, sir, they were red-hot with drinking;
So full of valour that they smote the air
For breathing in their faces; beat the ground
For kissing of their feet; yet always bending
Towards their project. Then I beat my tabor;
Atwhich, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,
Advanced their eyelids, lifted up their noses
As they smelt music: so I charm'd their ears
That calf-like they my lowing follow'd through Tooth'd briers, sharp furzes, pricking goss and thorns,

Which enter'd their frail shins : at last I left them I' the filthy-mantled pool beyond your cell,

Re-enter ARIEL before : then ALONSO, with a frantic gesture, attended by GONZALO; SEBASTIAN and ANTONIO in like manner, attended by ADRIAN and FRANCISCO: they all enter the circle which PROSPERO had made, and there stand charmed; which PROSPERO observing, speaks : A solemn air and the best comforter To an unsettled fancy cure thy brains, Now useless, boil'd within thy skull 1 There stand, Eor you are spell-storn'd

Holy Gonzalo, honourable man, Mine eyes, even sociable to the show of thine, Fall fellowly drops. The charm dissolves apace, And as the morning steals upon the night, Melting the darkness, so their rising senses Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mantle Their clearer reason. O good Gonzalo, My true preserver, and a loyal sir To him thou follow'st! I will pay thy graces Home both in word and deed. Most cruelly Didst thou, Alonso, use me and my daughter : Thy brother was a furtherer in the act. Thou art pinch'd for 't now, Sebastian. Flesh

You, brother mine, that entertain'd ambition, Expell'd remorse and nature; who, with Sebastian, Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong, Would here have kill'd your king; I doforgive thee, Unnatural though thou art. ARIEL sings and helps to attire him.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I: In a cowslip's bell I lie; There I couch when owls do cry. On the bat's back I do fly After summer merrily. Merrily, merrily shall I live now Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

PROS. Why, that's my dainty Ariel! I shall miss thee;
But yet thou shalt have freedom: so, so, so.
To the king's ship, invisible as thou art:
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatches; the master and the boatswain 128

PROS. Behold, sir king,

The wronged Duke of Milan, Prospero: For more assurance that a living prince Does now speak to thee, I embrace thy body; And to thee and thy company I bid A hearty welcome.

ALON. Whether thou be'st he or no,
Or some enchanted trifle to abuse me,
As late I have been, I not know : thy pulse
Beats as of flesh and blood ; and, since I saw thee,
The affliction of my mind amends, with which,
I fear, a madness held me : this must crave,
An if this be at all, a most strange story.
Thy dukedom I resign and do entreat

Be living and be here?

PROS. First, noble friend, Let me embrace thine age, whose honour cannot

Be measured or confined.

Gon. Whether this be Or be not, I'll not swear.

PROS. You do yet taste Some subtilties o' the isle, that will not let you Believe things certain. Welcome, my friends all!

PROS. I am woe for 't, sir. ALON. Irreparable is the loss, and patience

Says it is past her cure.

PROS. I rather think You have not sought her help, of whose soft grace

For the like loss I have her sovereign aid,

And rest myself content.

O heavens, that they were living both in Naples, The king and queen there I that they were, I wish Myself were mudded in that oozy bed

Where my son lies. When did you lose your daughter?

PROS. In this last tempest. I perceive, these lords
At this encounter do so much admire
That they devour their reason and scarce think
Their eyes do offices of truth, their words
Are natural breath : but, howsoe'er you have Been justled from your senses, know for certain
That I am Prospero and that very duke
Which was thrust forth of Milan, who most strangely

Upon this shore, where you were wreck'd, was landed,

To be the lord on 't. No more yet of this; For 'tis a chronicle of day by day, Not a relation for a breakfast, nor Befitting this first meeting. Welcome, sir;

This cell's my court: here have I few attendants

And subjects none abroad : pray you, look in. My dukedom since you have given me again, I will requite you with as good a thing ; At least bring forth a wonder, to content ye As much as me my dukedom.

Here PROSPERO discovers FERDINAND and MIRANDA playing at chess.

MIR. Sweet lord, you play me false. FER. No, my dear'st love, I would not for the world. MIR. Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should wrangle, And I would call it fair play. ALON. If this prove A vision of the island, one dear son Shall I twice lose. SEB. A most high miracle! FER. Though the seas threaten, they are merciful; I have cursed them without cause. Kneels. ALON. Your eld'st acquaintance cannot be three hours: Is she the goddess that hath sever'd us, And brought us thus together?

FER.

Sir, she is mortal;

But by immortal Providence she's mine: I chose her when I could not ask my father For his advice, nor thought I had one. She Is daughter to this famous Duke of Milan, Of whom so often I have heard renown, But never saw before; of whom I have Received a second life; and second father This lady makes him to me.

Re-enter ARIEL, with the Master and Boatswain amazedly following.

O look, sir, look, sir! here is more of us:
I prophesied, if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown. Now, blasphemy,
That swear'st grace o'erboard, not an oath on shore?
Hast thou no mouth by land? What is the news?
BOATS. The best news is, that we have safely found
Our king and company; the next, our ship—
Which, but three glasses since, we gave out split—
Is tight and yare and bravely rigg'd as when
We first put out to sea.

And—how we know not—all clapp'd under hatches;

Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains, And mo diversity of sounds, all horrible, We were awaked; straightway, at liberty;

Where we, in all her trim, freshly beheld Our royal, good and gallant ship, our master Capering to eye her : on a trice, so please you, Even in a dream, were we divided from them

TRIN. If these be true spies which I wear in my head, here's a goodly sight.

CAL. O Setebos, these be brave spirits indeed! How fine my master is! I am afraid He will chastise me.

He will chastise me.

SEB.

Ha, ha!

What things are these, my lord Antonio? Will money buy 'em?

ANT. Very like; one of them Is a plain fish, and, no doubt, marketable.

PROS. Mark but the badges of these men, my lords,

Then say if they be true. This mis-shapen knave,

His mother was a witch, and one so strong

That could control the moon, make flows and ebbs,

And deal in her command without her power.

ALON. And Trinculo is reeling ripe: where should they TRIN. I have been in such a pickle since I saw you last that, I fear me, will never out of my bones: I shall not fear fly-blowing.

SEB. Why, how now, Stephano!

STEPH. O, touch me not; I am not Stephano, but a cramp.

Now my charms are all o'erthrown, And what strength I have's mine own, Which is most faint: now, 'tis true, I must be here confined by you, Or sent to Naples. Let me not, Since I have my dukedom got And pardon'd the deceiver, dwell In this bare island by your spell; But release me from my bands With the help of your good hands: Gentle breath of yours my sails Must fill, or else my project fails, Which was to please. Now I want Spirits to enforce, art to enchant, And my ending is despair,
