The same Instrument on handsome Pedestal to contain 100 Views.

PRICE, $25.

(From the Quebec Gazette, October 10, 1860.)

NOTMAN'S CELEBRATED STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS AND REVOLVING STEREOSCOPES.

The instrument contains 100 Views of Canadian scenery—in fact is a perfect Canadian panorama, representing all that is worthy of observation throughout the Province in the way of public buildings, whether for use or ornament, and every phases of its scenery, including cultivated fields, the wild untrodden forest, waters lying in calm repose, covered with fleets from every land, or brattling over rapid and rock in all the magnificent beauty of nature's wildest and grandest vagaries. As a source of entertainment to the family circle nothing could be more appropriate than the Revolving Stereoscope, nothing better calculated to impress upon the youthful mind the great and grand features of their adopted country, and form a geographical study replete with instruction conveyed in the most pleasing forms of illustration. As a present from parties in Canada to friends or relatives in Britain, we can imagine nothing better adapted to give a true idea of what Canada really is.—Take up for instance a written description of the Falls of Niagara; does its impression convey even the slightest idea of the grandeur and magnificence of the scene? We are inclined to think a very feeble one indeed. But let the observer look into Notman's Revolving Stereoscope at the picture of the falls; let him look upon it earnestly and attentively, and the longer he looks the more engrossing becomes the view, until he fancies he feels the spray dashing over him, the rush and thunder of its waters ringing in his ears, and that he is in the visible presence of one of nature's greatest works.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS OF CANADA. Montreal; W. Notman.

The lament recently made by the Times' correspondent as to the non-existence of stereoscopic views or photographs of the magnificent scenery of Canada, appears to have been written in singular ignorance of the real facts of the case. As we have before us a catalogue of upwards of five hundred views in Canada, including urban, sylvan, and maritime. Of these a copious selection has been forwarded to us. As pictures, they all possess artistic excellence, whilst a few of them we must pronounce as amongst the best, if not the best, both as photographs and as pictures, that we have ever examined. In these we have natural skies in the utmost perfection. Masses of cumulo-se clouds driving along in headlong haste, as if to keep pace with the unresting turbulence of the rapids or cataracts beneath, give a singular unity and harmony of wild grandeur that we have never before met with. These heavy stormy skies are suggestive of any thing but brilliant sunlight, in which to produce the views; and yet they are evidently instantaneous photographs. It would be too much to say that the foliage has not in some instances suffered; but to an extent comparatively trifling, when the other advantages are considered. The exquisite beauty of these sky effects should, we think, stimulate photographers to more effort to secure them; white skies, unlike any thing ever seen in nature, are the chief defects of English photographs.
